11:31:39 From Katrina to Everyone: People think creativity is drawing or writing or sometime of art.

11:31:42 From Jason to Everyone: Some people just need to be forced into being creative

11:32:05 From Katrina to Everyone: Replying to "People think creativ..." "Some kind"

11:32:16 From Heather Varney to Everyone: If you can take a bunch of date numbers and create a story that tells something about that data...that's creative, I don't care how analytical you are.

11:32:21 From Anh to Everyone: Replying to "Everyone is creative..."I agree...I think many don't realize they are or think that creativity means being artistic or have musical talent. Creativity differs for each person.

11:32:26 From Anh to Everyone: Reacted to "People think creativ..." with 👍

11:32:28 From Chet Stevenson to Everyone: I'm a big advocate of Design Thinking - specifically IDEO style. They always say "you don't have to be a "creative person" to be creative," creativity is a process." As it relates to this exercise, part of the Design Thinking process is getting input from others.

11:33:21 From Erica "Heidi" Beggan to Everyone: And what Jennifer K. just shared ties to a point that this statement from the White Paper Shannon shared states: "While scientists are still at the beginning stages of understanding the neuroscience of creativity, the myth of the "creative right brain" has been disproven. It is now generally accepted that the capacity for creativity—at least to some extent—is common to all of us."

For example, you need to have inclusion safety (trust, belonging) before learner safety (being ble to ask questions, feedback, etc): <https://psychsafety.co.uk/the-four-stages-of-psychological-safety/>
